The art of micromosaic originated in Venice

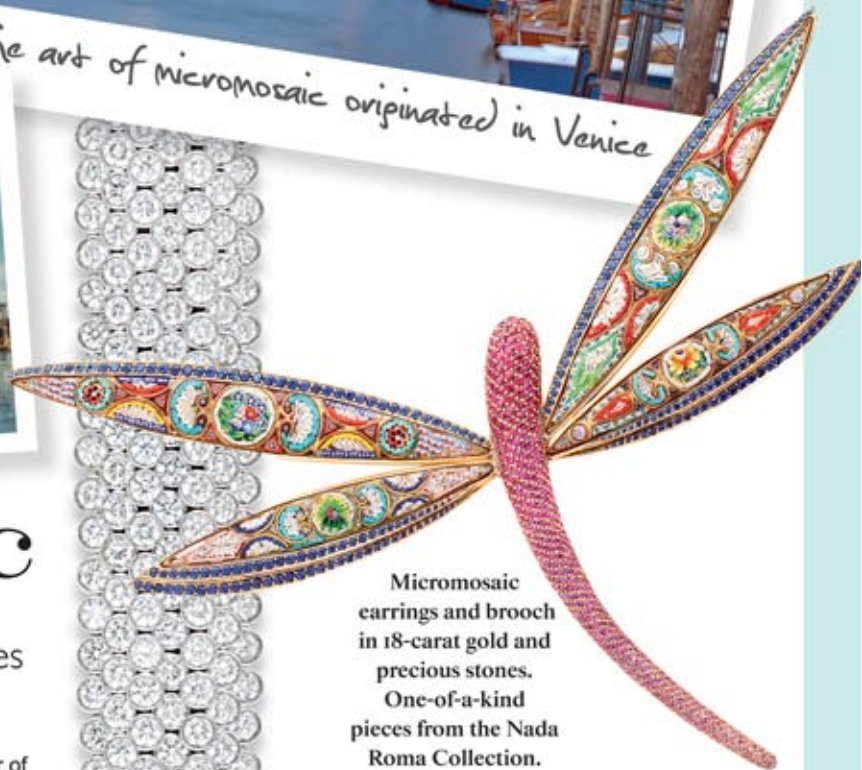

Micro magic

Think you've seen it all? Think again. Nourbel & Le Cavalier bring ancient pieces up-to-date with a modern-day twist

Since throwing open the doors of its very first boutique last year, Nourbel & Le Cavalier has established itself as a jewellery newcomer of note. It fits seamlessly into London's iconic Burlington Arcade and its collections are rich in both style and history, featuring one-of-a-kind, timeless pieces. Originally made in Venice, Florence and Rome between 1850 and 1960, exquisitely delicate micromosaics have been brought up-to-date with a modern Nourbel & Le Cavalier twist. Not only that, but they're 100 per cent original.

Limited-edition bracelets weave in a snake-like fashion unlike anything we've seen before – so much so, that it is exclusive to the brand and has now been patented. All creations by Nourbel & Le Cavalier bear the Swiss master jeweller's hallmark. It seems there is a new mover and shaker in jewellery town – and we like what we see.
